Abstract: The purpose of this study was to determine if there were differences in the prevalence of risk factors between patients who had been hospitalized at least once during their lifetime and those who had not. A total of 600 patients from two hospitals were interviewed about their health status, lifestyle habits, and social support. The results showed that patients who had been hospitalized at least once during their lifetime had significantly higher rates of smoking, drinking alcohol, and being overweight than those who had not been hospitalized. These findings suggest that patients who have been hospitalized may be at greater risk for developing chronic diseases and other health problems.
